A prenuptial agreement lawyer explains how to change a binding financial agreement

Date : April 12, 2022

It is best to seek out a prenuptial agreement lawyer if you want to dispute a binding financial agreement ('BFA'). This type of agreement, like any other contract in law is subject to strict rules. However, s 90K (1) of the Family Law Act 1975 allows a court to set aside a binding financial agreement. There is a list of reasons outlined in this section including:

- The agreement is obtained by fraud
- The agreement is void, voidable or unenforceable
- Arising circumstances make it impracticable for part of or the entire agreement to be carried out

A prenuptial agreement lawyer can advise you on what makes an act of "fraud". Ordinarily it is involves using false representations to obtain an unjust advantage. However, to prove fraud, it must be shown that the false representation was made knowingly. This can be either without belief in its truth or in a reckless manner.

The terms void, voidable or uncertain will not be unfamiliar to your prenuptial agreement lawyer. Both in common law and equity, a court can deem a BFA invalid if there is duress undue influence, unjust enrichment or unconscionability. In Teves & Campomayor duress meant 'sufficient oppression…to vitiate the reality of…consent.' The presence of unconscionable behavior reflects conduct by one party attempting benefit from a person with a disability. If the conduct of the stronger party is not consistent with good conscience, then the court of equity can intervene.

A prenuptial agreement lawyer will be able to discuss with you practicality of an arrangement. More specifically that a distinction can be drawn with the concept of frustration in contractual matters. Essentially, the Court will concern itself with the occurrence of events that are not reasonably foreseeable. Such events can cause the termination of a BFA if they have the effect of causing an injustice to yourself or other concerned parties.

This is a limited overview of the Courts power to set aside a BFA. Since every scenario is unique it is best to speak to one of our prenuptial agreement lawyers. They will be able to provide advice that is specific to your circumstances and the possible outcome of proceedings.
